

Daniel S. McLeod, retired sergeant and CEO of Crime Point, Inc., established the company in 2000, having personally experienced the need for progressive, police-specific surveillance equipment that is accurately represented and adequately supported to maximize its effective field use. He spearheads a multi-disciplinary, multi-national team of engineers, craftsmen and technicians -- all with a single-minded dedication to technological excellence, innovation and industry-leading customer service.

Mr. McLeod is a recognized law enforcement expert, not only in surveillance but in the application of surveillance equipment for criminal prosecution and solutions to crime magnet locations. His successes within his own agency led to requests from other agencies and an opportunity to establish a business based on a passion to serve law enforcement agencies with the highest quality equipment and exceptional product support.

As a retired sergeant, Dan McLeod's law enforcement career emphasized street and supervisory experience in some of the fastest, high-crime areas of a large Southern California agency. He served as a detective on narcotics, gang and special enforcement teams, developing expertise in community-wide gang eradication programs, Crime Prevention through Environment Design (CPTED) and authoring/teaching POST-approved courses state-wide on property-based criminal abatement.
